Note for Year 13 Visual Arts Design & Photography

^In these subjects there is a real advantage to students having their own computer – see the Digital Media Recommended Specifications at the end of this book.

Digital Media Recommended Specs

(Applicable to any subject where creating digital media is a central focus. i.e. video editing, animation, graphic design, image manipulation, 3D modelling, sound FX, print design, art, photography etc.)

When buying a new computer, it's easy to become confused by the mountain of technical decisions you need to make. As a digital media student, your device needs to be quick, powerful, and practical to allow you to consume and create content using digital tools used in class. To avoid any performance, compatibility, and other limiting issues we suggest your machine has at least the following specs:

Minimum Specs	What it means for you
At least Core i5 is sufficient (if budget suits go for i7)	Gives you a good 'top speed' for your programs running
At least 8GB DDR3 RAM	Run multiple apps without slowing down the computer
At least 128GB SSD	High performance hard-drive with plenty of space
Windows 7 or Higher	Easy compatibility with HIBS printers, wireless, and software
Keyboard with Mousepad	Essential for typing up documents and using programs
At least 13" size screen	Enough space to work while maintaining portability
USB Port	Plug in school devices to use. E.g. a mouse, camera, external monitor or 3D printer.
Display Port or HDMI	Dock your machine into one of our school monitors for better viewing

BUT WAIT THERE'S MORE... Emerging technologies are allowing for more innovative and easier way to do things. Take a look at including these optional features too.

Optional Specs	What it means for you
Touch Screen	Use programs and apps designed for touch.
Stylus Pen	Draw directly on the screen to mark-up documents, sketch, draw diagrams, take notes, scribble etc.
Tablet mode	Many modern laptops can transform into a 'tablet mode'. Using a device in this form adds a new dynamic to teaching and learning. E.g. sketch, reading books, using as a camera, mobile apps, note taking, etc

NOW ADD SOME FLAVOUR... After securing these specs, it's what feels right to you that should decide all the rest. Things like colour, brand, slimness, weight, card readers, DVD drive, etc. On the next page, we've made a few suggestions which you may want to look at.

$$1 \times$$

$$1 = 2 \times 2$$

$$6 = 2 \times 3$$

only outside

It's what's on the inside that counts.

It's very important your computer has the good stuff inside, however, a careful decision regarding the outside could boost your student-abilities ten-fold. For example, with the right machine you could use a stylus pen and draw directly onto the screen. Like this! A feature that would be very handy when taking notes, drawing diagrams, sketching, etc!

The following computers have ample power for our Digital Media Students, however, have fundamental differences in their construction. These differences will dictate the way you interact with the computer in the classroom environment. Take the time to learn these different form factors and give them a try in your local computer stores. The right decision is the one that you think will work for you.

	Microsoft Surface Book	Lenovo Yoga 3	Surface Pro 4	Elitebook 8760w
Type	2-in-1 Laptop	Laptop Convertible	Tablet	TouchScreen Laptop
The Gist	The Surface Book is a High Performance touch-laptop for all your Digital Media needs. The screen also undocks and becomes a tablet.	The Yoga 3 is a laptop that bends back 360 degrees. It gives you the flexibility to use it in tent, stand, tablet, and of course laptop mode.	The Surface Pro 4 is a tablet with the performance of a laptop. The detachable magnetic cover doubles up as a keyboard.	Your good ol' reliable laptop which has carried us through the past generation. Still the way to go if your looking for screen size of 15"+.
